PAS 125:2011 & VDA Development Combined

The PAS 125 and ATA accreditations have focused the attention of the Accident Repair Industry. The cost of achieving PAS125 & gaining the Kitemark license is significant, and the preparation for accreditations in ATA VDA, Senior Panel, Senior MET and Senior Paint Technician can amount to a small fortune. The exam fees alone, total in excess of £3000, and that doesn't include any training, travel, hotel; loss of production during the training and exam period....The list is long and costly. Add to that BSI fees, Support fees, possible equipment upgrade costs, it is a substantial amount.

The ATA accreditation for Vehicle Damage Assessor, is renowned as being the most difficult ATA to gain, and is still only achieving a 50% first time pass rate. One of the prime reasons for this high fail rate is in relation to appraising the damage and establishing a safe & appropriate repair specification for the vehicle under consideration. This is driven, in many instances, by a limited awareness, of the significance of the repair tasks required or likely to be encountered during the repair process and being sufficiently experienced to include actions required to mitigate any potential hazards.
